

A peek into the old diaries and research notebooks of Philip Emeagwali that pertains to the internet.

My Eureka! Moment

My moment of ~~the~~ discovery was the day I first used all my ~~mail at a time~~ 65,536 sub-computers to compute simultaneously and ^{to} communicate synchronously. It was my Eureka! Moment because the speeds of my computation jumped ^{from one at a time to at a time} \uparrow 65,536 ^{times}, from under one million calculations per second to over one billion calculations per second. It was visceral because it was a world record. ^{achieved through a 65,536 fold} ~~increase~~

eureka-moment_1

And the speed of my internet communication ^{also} jumped from one email at a time to 65,536 emails that I sent and received synchronously. That was also a world record in internet communication.

I cried each time I ^{successfully} repeated the and see speeds previously unseen computation and communication. I cried because I ^{managed} used an unconventional technique to an unorthodox technology to push the frontiers of supercomputer

You are a role model to me and many young people, especially NIGERIANS. I have concluded that i have no reason not to succeed and affect the world. My dear Prof. Philip, much is expected of you as "it is not life that matters but the courage you are able to bring to life".
