Professor Emeagwali,

I hope this message finds you and your family in good spirits. I had the distinct pleasure of meeting you in person in 2003 at the National Society of Black Engineers National Convention in Orlando, FL. We spent about two days together talking about technology development in Africa and your unique life journey.

Since that time, I have finished my undergraduate degree in Chemical Engineering and graduate degree in Petroleum Engineering. I now work for Chevron as a petroleum engineer in central California. My own personal journey has lead me to further pursue the cause of development in Africa through a legal education.

During the past four months, I have been studying to take the required law school exam, the LSAT. This past Saturday, I took the exam in Southern California. To my pleasant surprise, my second reading comprehension passage was entirely about YOU. It spoke of your journey from Nigeria to America and your work on parallel computing. Specifically it related your work on oil field simulation to design features found in nature like the networks that exists in the branches of trees. It also make a connection with honey bee comb patterns and a weather modeling algorithms you developed.

I was amazed and proud to know that you were one of four passages featured on the LSAT exam that was taken by nearly 30,000 people across the United States this past weekend. This will surely raise your profile amongst thousands of young people across the country and the world. The full test will be released in a few months and I will send you the passage once it's released.

Congratulations and I best wishes on your current endeavors.

Warmest Regards,

Uduak Ntuk
